V. Training: Overview of City of Oakland Negotiated Settlement Agreement Concerning Pattern and Practice Claims. Presenter: James Chanin (~45-60 minutes)

In a lawsuit filed in Federal Court in December 2000, Civil rights attorneys John Burriss and James Chanin represented 119 plaintiffs who alleged that four veteran OPD police officers known as the "Riders" had violated their civil rights. The City settled with the 119 plaintiffs for $10.9 million; the plaintiffs agreed to an amount below what they could have been awarded under the condition that OPD make significant reforms to its operations and relationship with the public. In 2003, the City signed a Negotiated Settlement Agreement ("NSA") that required OPD to make major reforms to its internal operations and reaffirm its commitment to constitutional policing.
